NEW YEAR'S EVE

of the Scenes that Will Be Witnessed To-night.

Did you ever notice how readily you can tell a person's nationality, religious beliefs and even the section of the country in which he was raised by noting what he does on New Year's eve? You

New Year's observances have been customary ever since the beginning of history, though there is hardly a holi-day more diversely celebrated. The Jewish New Year is in the fall, on the day when Adam is supposed to have be-gun existence. The Asiatic nations cel-ebrate it in the summer. The Roman New Year's day was formerly in March,

New Year's day was formerly in March, but it was changed to the first of the month named after Janus-January.

The ancient Britons celebrated it as the principal festival of the year. The Druids cut branches of mistletoe with pseuliar religious ceremonies. The Saxons spent the day in festivity and giving presents.

peculiar religious ceremonics. The Saxons spent the day in feativity and giving presents.

Early in the Christian era the day had become one of brutal, drunken senaudity, the people indulging publicly in the gressest forms of licenticusness.

The church tried to suppress the celebration of New Yoar's, but it was too firmly rooted in the hearts of the people, and the church then turned its attention to reforming the feativities.

In the fourth century December 25 was fixed as the birthday of Christ; and January 1, being the eighth day after, became the anniversary of the circumcision. The Council of Tours (657), above mentioned, gave authority and weight to the day by ordering that on January 1 a misse rivenmetalomis should be celebrated. It was not until late in the sixteenth century that January 1 was universally accepted as the first day of the new year, but the association of the day with the circumcision of our Lord had a powerful influence in giving the day a religious character, and imparting to it certain distinctive Christian features.

In Seanned and Treland, in olden three it was not considered.

Lord had a powerful influence in giving the day a religious character, and imparting to it certain distinctive Christian features.

In Secanal and Ireland, in olden times, it was not considered "good form" to enter a neighbor's house on this day without bringing a present, usually a bottle of whisky. In this way, perhaps, the habit of receiving friends and furnishing them drinks originated. In some of the religious communions there is a special midnight service. In many of the Roman Catholic churches a Te Deum is sung at midnight. In the Episcopal Church, although the practice is by no means universal, the new year is ushered in with a religious service.

In America, made up as it is of people of all nations, the new year customs partake of the customs of all countries. But a peculiarly American observance of the day is what are known as "watchmeetings," at which the time before midnight is passed in religious worship, after which the birth of the new year is greeted with a burst of song or the church bells.

The person who spends to-night on the Avenue will hear a strange medley of noises at midnight. The first moment of the new year will ring with the sonorous tones of the chime-bells of the Metropolitan M, E. Church, as Professor Widdows makes the echoes ring with the first notes of "Joy to the World." Then will counce a pistol-shot, a blast from a tin-horn increasing to a regular fusilade of pistols and a diabolical "toot-toot" of tin-horns that banishes sleep from any sleepy eyes that may be shut.

The streets are full of young men, and some old ones, too, who are taking their last drinks preparatory to a New Year "swear off," and many a "never thic touch another drop slong slive (hic, shelpme," will be repeated, to the barkeepers' intense amusement.

The Washingtonians are not all drank at this time, but except the newspaper men and the watchers of the public peace (and not all of theke can be excepted), every one on the street is drunk, or wishes he was.

The chimes continue, the pistols are fred at long
